

I am against relaxing the rules regarding media ownership. It is clearly not in the public's interest because it would concentrate control of media outlets in the hands of a few rich, powerful, and politically well-connected media moguls. This could stifle free speech by limiting the access to a diversity of opinions in many media markets. I thought that the public airways belonged to the American people--why are you going to let them be controlled by a few powerful individuals with their own political agendas?
